European style is becoming popular for its elegant blend of Victorian-inspired details and modern minimalism. This design approach features light colors, open floor plans, high ceilings, and ornate moldings, offering a timeless elegance that merges historic opulence with contemporary simplicity. The charm of European interiors lies in their ability to evoke a sense of grandeur while maintaining a clean, airy feel, making them increasingly popular in modern homes seeking a touch of classic sophistication.

Insider Tips

Mixing and matching chairs adds a curated and personalized touch to any dining room. To maintain cohesion, stick to a consistent color palette or design element, like matching wooden tones or chair heights. Consider balancing bold statement chairs with more understated styles, such as pairing intricate, ornate chairs with sleek, minimalist ones. This eclectic approach can bring warmth and character, making your dining area more intriguing and inviting.

Q&A: Does it matter how tall a coffee table is?

A: The height of your coffee table does matter for both aesthetic and functional reasons. Ideally, a coffee table should be about the same height as the seat cushions of your sofa or 1-2 inches lower. This height ensures ease of use for placing down or picking up items and that the line of sight across the seating area is unobstructed.

In some cases, it may make sense to choose an even lower height to create more depth if floor seating will be used or if you're trying to achieve a more spacious and open look.
